I have submitted comments once before and wish to extend those comments with these few words:

According to the law as it has been put forth by Congress; any company created within the boundaries of the United States shall be considered, for all intents and purposes, an individual with all rights, restrictions, and abilities which a normal person shall have attained as a member of these United States. Thus, should one company cause another company to cease to exist - for whatever reason, then the company which no longer exists can be said to have been killed by the first company.

My questions are:

1. Is this not murder?
2. Should we, as a nation, encourage, condone, work with, or even aid these actions?
